I view the Predictive Nematode Assay as a major element of the tobacco nematode management program. As a producer, you need to determine if a harmful nematode is present and, if present, at what levels.

In 1982 there were 827 samples submitted from the 15 county tobacco area. Three percent or 29 samples came from six Appomattox County producers. 39 percent of those samples carried treatment recommendations.

In 1983, the number of samples submitted dropped to 470. Appomattox County submitted four samples from three producers.

We have a goal of having 30 producers participating in this program by 1987. For several years, Lunenburg County has had well over 100 samples submitted. With over 200 tobacco producers, Appomattox County should also be submitting 100 plus samples.

There are several reasons why sample numbers dropped last year – late season, drought conditions and rainy fall.

There are some farmers, because of many reasons -- interest rates, drought, low prices or combinations, find their economic situation stressed. These farmers are facing a crises; their future is uncertain. If you find yourself in this situation, plan to attend one of two programs, "Management in Uncertain Times," Farmville, March 7, at the Prince Edward Extension Office, or March 13, at Lynchburg at Western Sizzlin Steak House.

We do need to register participants for lunch arrangements. Call 352-8244 if you plan to attend.

There's on the market some relatively new temporary fencing materials. There is a grade for sheep and a heavier grade for cattle. One of the products is called 6 wire livestrand electro plastic fencing twine. The three strand temporary fence is charged with a portable charge that uses (6)D batteries.

One of the Extension Agents in Bedford County tells me they had excellent results controlling sheep with this material last fall.

If you are using orchard grass for pasture and/or hay, you better check the stand. Several fields that I've walked over recently show a significant loss of orchard grass from last summer's drought and heat.

While checking the orchard grass, this is a good time to take inventory of the clover in hay and pasture land.

Last as soon as you can, get on the land to reseed, but do it with minimum tillage. There are four "musts" to a successful job: Minimize competition; seed at proper time--February to early March; adequate fertility--this includes lime; and always use high quality seed.

There are many who do not thoroughly understand Federal Crop Insurance, who have been disappointed in the appraisal and pay-out or those who have never had it properly explained. On Tuesday, February 21, we'll have Federal Crop Insurance representatives here to try to overcome these problems and listen to your concerns. This program is at 9 a.m. at the District Extension Office Auditorium (across street from Curthouse).

Following this presentation, there will be a representative from Davis Grain Corporation to discuss the opportunity for growing and marketing sunflowers in 1984.

These programs will be over by noon.

USDA announces sign-up in dairy program

By TOM CONRAD

USDA ANNOUNCES SIGN UP IN DAIRY REDUCTION PROGRAM - Deputy Secretary of Agriculture Richard E. Lyng said today that 37,530 dairy producers have signed contracts with the U. S. Department of Agriculture to reduce milk output under the Dairy and Tobacco Adjustment Act of 1983. The contracts will be accepted at the amounts offered by the dairy producers, he said.

The participants representing some 12 percent of the nation's dairy producers, have contracted to reduce fluid milk output by 9.3 billion pounds. This would be about 5.5 percent of the estimated milk output during the 15 months of the program. The reduction in calendar 1984 will be about 7.4 billion pounds, and could range from 6.5 to 8.2 billion pounds.

"This is a substantial amount, but it is also somewhat disappointing since we had hoped a larger number would participate," Lyng said. "It appears the dairy surplus problem is not going to be resolved as quickly as all of us had hoped."

Contracts show an intended herd reduction under the program of 336,796 head above normal culling. Producers also indicated their intentions to send, 23 percent of that amount to slaughter by Jan. 31. The remaining reduction will be at a rate of about 20,000 head per month. This should not have a significant impact on cattle; poultry or hog markets.

Lyng said payments to participants of $10 per hundredweight of reduction will total about $930 million. This will be financed by a 50-cent per hundredweight USDA assessment on all milk produced in the 48 contiguous states and marketed for commercial uses.

This assessment runs from Dec. 1, 1983 to March 31, 1985. It replaces two 50-cent assessments imposed under legislation enacted by congress in an attempt to resolve the dairy surplus problem.

Another mandatory assessment of 15 cents per hundredweight will begin when the program for dairy products promotion, research and nutrition education becomes effective. Lyng said USDA is working on the portion of the act which calls for the establishment of a 36 member National Dairy Promotion and Research Board.

Lyng said dairy product promotion efforts will be designed to increase public consumption and further decrease the cost of the government's dairy surplus acquisition program.

However, he said, participation figures indicate that a further reduction in milk output will be needed after the 15 months in the program have lapsed. "It also appears that further adjustment will be necessary to bring the diary supply and demand closer into balance."

The $13.10 per hundredweight average support price for milk was reduced by 50 cents on Dec. 1 1983 as authorized by congress under the Dairy and Tobacco Adjustment Act.

December marked the 56th consecutive month of year-to-year increases in milk production. Since 1979, these increases have resulted from gains in both cow numbers and the amount of milk per cow.

SIGN UP INFORMATION - February 24 is the final date for filing intentions to participate in the 1984 wheat and feed grain programs and also the Agricultural Conservation Program. If you have not been by the ASCS office to discuss these programs, please stop by before deadline - February 24.

Good News For Homemakers

Safety of canned foods

By SHIRLEY W. WALTON
Extension Agent

Some persons may find that their home-canned vegetables may taste a little mushy when eaten if they stored them in an unheated garage or shed during freezing temperatures.

A decrease in quality or texture may be noticeable in those foods which have been frozen during extremely low temperatures. The nutritive value will be somewhat lessened and you will see some possible difference in flavor. These foods are still safe to eat if the container does not show any breakage in seal.

The stored foods should be checked immediately, however, for broken seals, cracked jars or bulging cans. If the container is so damaged, the food should be discarded as it is not fit to eat.

Rust formed from the condensation on the outside of cans poses no real danger, although a person may want to remove any remaining moisture to prevent further rusting and deterioration of tin in the can. The food is not safe to eat if the rust has gone through the can.

If there is more severe cold this winter, the canned foods stored in unheated areas will have additional slight decreases in quality. It would take many severe freeze-frost cycles to make the food completely unpalatable.

Many persons have had difficulty with cans bulging that have been stored for an excessive length of time. Do not, Do not keep canned foods too long. In tin cans, food should only be kept 14 to 18 months. This is especially true if there is an acid vegetable, such as tomatoes, in the can. For example, spaghetti sauce should not be kept more than 14 months.

A recent check with the Food Science Technology Lab at Virginia Tech confirmed this information. You get a detinning of the can when it is kept for an excessive length of time. I, also, wish to caution you about buying foods in the supermarket by the case and storing them on your shelf for longer than 8 to 12 months. Remember, you do not know exactly how long they have been in the supermarket.

If you have a specific question about the safety of your canned goods, call the Appomattox County Extension Office at 352-8244 or write us at P.O. Box 488, Appomattox, VA 24522. It is always a pleasure to hear from you and to help you.

Have a good week!
